A weekend that did not go exactly as planned

Last weekend Pavel travelled to Saint Petersburg with his parents. They left Moscow by train on Friday evening because tickets were cheaper at night. Pavel wanted to sleep, but the carriage was noisy, and a little girl across the aisle was asking her grandmother questions about every station. When the family arrived on Saturday morning, the weather was cold but bright, so they walked along the river before visiting a museum.

In the afternoon they planned to eat in a famous cafe, but it was full. Instead, they found a small place in a side street. Pavel was disappointed at first, yet the food was excellent, and the owner told them a story about the old building. On Sunday they bought presents for friends and returned home. Pavel was tired, but he decided that unexpected changes can make a trip more interesting.
